From 20th Century Studios comes "The Bob's Burgers Movie," an animated big-screen musical comedy-mystery-adventure based on the long-running Emmy®-winning television series. "The Bob's Burgers Movie" stars H. Jon Benjamin, Dan Mintz, Eugene Mirman, Larry Murphy, John Roberts, Kristen Schaal, with Zach Galifianakis and Kevin Kline, all reprising their beloved roles for the fan-favorite animated comedy. The film's directors are Loren Bouchard & Bernard Derriman. The screenplay is by Loren Bouchard & Nora Smith. The producers are Janelle Momary-Neely, Loren Bouchard and Nora Smith.

"The Bob's Burgers Movie" arrives in theaters May 27, 2022.

ABOUT THE FILM

Ever since the animated comedy "Bob's Burgers" debuted on FOX in January of 2011, the hilarious, heartwarming series has won over critics and audiences with its quirky characters, delightfully silly songs and offbeat storylines. Set in an unnamed beach town, the show follows the members of the ever-relatable Belcher family as they persevere through struggles ranging from the mundane to the absurd. No matter what obstacles come their way, though, worrywart dad Bob, upbeat wife Linda and their three children—boy-crazy Tina, affable Gene and precocious Louise—overcome them by relying on (and good-naturedly ribbing) one another.

After 12 acclaimed seasons, "Bob's Burgers" has amassed a devoted fan base that has taken the quirky restaurant proprietors into their hearts. Now, series creator Loren Bouchard, working with screenwriting and producing partner Nora Smith and director Bernard Derriman, has crafted "The Bob's Burgers Movie." Original and inventive, the murder-mystery musical-comedy should satisfy longtime viewers at the same time as it invites newcomers into the Belchers' colorful world.

The story begins when a ruptured water main creates an enormous sinkhole right in front of Bob's Burgers, blocking the entrance indefinitely and ruining the Belchers' plans for a successful summer. While Bob and Linda struggle to keep the business afloat, the kids try to solve a mystery that could save their family's restaurant. As the dangers mount, these underdogs help each other find hope and fight to get back behind the counter, where they belong.

"The movie's about optimism," says Bouchard, who serves as the film's co-director, co-writer and producer. "We wanted to tell a story about a family that does not have all the answers. They have not figured out how they're going to pay for college or retirement—or how they're even going to pay the bills next month—yet they're irrepressibly buoyant and excited to get up each day. That kind of optimism feels especially relevant right now."

INSIDE THE STORY

Just like Bob Belcher with his clever daily specials, the "Bob's Burgers" creative team has long sought to take the most innovative approach possible to their work, devising adventures for the Belchers on television and beyond. After cooking up holiday episodes and live table reads, the series' cast and crew had embarked on rehearsals for a pair of special live shows set to take place at Los Angeles' historic Orpheum Theater back in the summer of 2017. It was then that Loren Bouchard got the call asking if he'd like to make a "Bob's Burgers" movie.

Given the ambitious nature of the production he'd been planning—which would feature the cast performing well-known songs from the TV show with a full backing band, enormous puppets and copious amounts of confetti—the timing felt fortuitous. "I felt like we were ready to try to scale up 'Bob's' and do something that would be worth going to the theater to see," he says. "We were already thinking about taking a small show about a restaurant and a family and making it feel so big that it pinned you back in your seat."

Yet as Bouchard and "Bob's Burgers" co-showrunner Nora Smith set out to write a story that would feel big enough for the big screen, both understood that their screenplay could not fundamentally alter the DNA of the series. "We had a specific problem from the beginning, which is how do you tell a story that doesn't break the show?" Bouchard says. "A movie is an exciting event in which characters are transformed, their lives are forever changed. But we couldn't change our characters' lives so significantly that you can't pick up the next day with them going back to work and be this little struggling restaurant."

In time, they settled on an idea that was part murder mystery, part musical—and entirely in keeping with the show's unconventional bent. "We really liked genre-jumping, so it was going to be our mash-up of those things with comedy in there and action-adventure in there, too," Bouchard says. Most importantly, though, their script would be squarely centered on the show's endearing cast of characters. "We've come too far, and we've spent too long being a character-driven show, to switch to being a story-driven movie," Bouchard says. "We had to be a character-driven movie with a great story."

"The Bob's Burgers Movie" opens with the family preparing for what will surely be the sunny-side-up summer of their lives. Linda is confident the bank will grant an extension on their loan payment; Bob, not so much. "In a way, Linda is the captain of the ship, because she's the one with the most positive energy," says H. Jon Benjamin, who stars as Bob Belcher. "Bob is a bit of a cynic." Lovestruck Tina is hatching a scheme to make crush Jimmy Jr. her boyfriend, and Gene is excited to play some shows with his underappreciated but influential band, The Itty Bitty Ditty Committee—he's even created a rad new musical instrument sure to take the town by storm.

But things take a turn for the worse when an enormous sinkhole opens across the entirety of the restaurant's storefront. Suddenly, Bob and Linda are forced to find unconventional ways to sell enough burgers to pay the bills, with a little help from their most loyal customer, Teddy. Meanwhile, the children begin to unearth surprising truths about local waterfront amusement park the Wonder Wharf, as well as the family's wealthy landlord, Mr. Fischoeder, and themselves.

The adventure becomes particularly poignant for young Louise, with the screenwriters exploring just how the youngest Belcher came to wear her signature pink hat. "We wanted that to feel lived-in and real and sweet," Bouchard says. "Our secret hope was that this isn't just a mystery where this family saves the town—it's the story about a nine-year-old girl and how she can get to that place at the very end of the movie where the hat falls off and she's ok."

ABOUT THE PRODUCTION

Once Bouchard and Smith had completed the script in 2018, Bouchard, directing partner Bernard Derriman and their team of storyboard artists began sketching out early versions of every scene in the film. For the showstopping musical production numbers, which see dozens of characters singing and dancing their way across the screen, Derriman turned to Smith for some very specific inspiration. “I was trying to give all the characters natural movements—coming up with our dance moves was a big part of that,” says Derriman. “Nora Smith was great at doing reference for us. When I was animating, she’d prop her phone up in her kitchen and do a really funny dance. It would always translate so well to animation.”

Every aspect of the production involved remaining true to all the characteristics that make “Bob’s Burgers” so specific and unique, while at the same time amplifying them to create a true cinematic experience. Chiefly, despite the current mainstream popularity of 3D animation, directors Bouchard and Derriman were only interested in making a traditional 2D animated film that had the same aesthetic as their series. “We felt a little like an underdog championing an old form, but 2D has a lot to offer,” Bouchard says. “In my opinion it’s the most beautiful form of animation. You can feel the artist’s hand in the line and enjoy the colors.”

In terms of visuals, Bouchard and Derriman collaborated closely with production designer Ruben Hickman, whose skill with light and shadow helped bring depth and dimension to the world of the film. The creative team also partnered with conductor and orchestrator Tim Davies (“Trollhunters: Tales of Arcadia”), who brought in a full orchestra to record the music for “The Bob’s Burgers Movie” at the storied Newman Scoring Stage on the Fox Studio Lot. “Our sound is a little bit of a flea market orchestra, a little bit of an eBay special, oddball instrument lineup, so for a lot of us it was the first moment where it was like, ‘This is a real movie!’” Bouchard says. “To see all the string players in that big space watching the film on the screen and playing these soaring cues, to hear the timpani players banging on their drums, it was thrilling.”

Still, much of the work on “The Bob’s Burgers Movie” was completed remotely, including the performances. During the summer of 2020, the actors recorded their lines in their own homes, with support from the behind-the-scenes team. “Most of the time, they were crawling into closets and bringing a whole ton of pillows and cushions in to muffle the sound,” Derriman says. “We’d always planned for them to re-record what they’d originally done in a studio, but as it turned out, some of the takes we got in those closets just worked great and we fell in love with them. Sometimes, it’s really hard to recapture that energy.”

Although it took years to bring together the story and the visuals, along with the heartfelt performances and the memorable music, investing so much time in the film allowed the cast and crew to achieve the creative goals they had set for themselves. It also ensured that the COVID-19 pandemic had reached a phase where it would be safe for audiences to gather in theaters to enjoy “The Bob’s Burgers Movie.” “We got the blessing of a little more time,” Bouchard says. “Everyone was committed to making it work.”

H. Jon Benjamin, for one, was impressed with Bouchard’s unwavering commitment to the project and his enduring love for all the members of the Belcher clan. “Loren’s such the driving force of the show,” Benjamin says. “He created the whole world. He handpicked the characters in a way—casting was a big part in the origins of the show. It’s always so impressive how specific he is with his choices and communicating exactly what he wants, and then giving us the freedom to do what we do.”

For both Bouchard and Smith, the sheer talent of the cast and the actors’ profound understanding of the lovable characters they’ve now portrayed for more than a decade are the secret ingredients in the comedy’s singular recipe—and one of the keys to the longevity of "Bob's Burgers."

"We have one of the best casts on TV—I know everybody says that, but I'm right," says Smith. "They're just all so funny, and a lot of those people had been working together for a long time, so when they seem like they are a family, it's because they have been a work family. When you write a show that has heart to it, you can write something funny, and it will stick with you."

Concludes Bouchard: "At the end of the day, you don't feel loyalty to the show, you feel loyalty to the characters—and that's because we've spent so much time imagining that they're real."
